Wall prompts other exhibits

- “Through The Eyes” - a guided tour of more than 500 photographs and 400 artifacts will be offered during the wall’s stop in Grant County.
- Huey helicopter, Jeep and cargo truck - a hands-on exhibit showing pieces of equipment from the Vietnam War.
- Vietnam Exhibit - featuring works of John Osborne, as well as artifacts from the war at the Grant County Public Library. Exhibit runs through Juy 31.

Grant County residents welcomed the Vietnam Traveling Memorial Wall to town on July 9.

ABOUT THE WALL:

The Vietnam Traveling Memorial Wall arrived in Grant County on July 10. It will be on display through July 15 at the Kentucky Veterans Cemetery North (on Eibeck Lane) in Williamstown.

The wall is a three-fifths scale replica of the Vietnam Memorial in Washington, D.C. It stands 6-feet tall at its center and covers 300 feet from end to end.

The names on the wall are listed by day of casualty. Beginning at the center/apex, the names start on the East Wall (right-hand side) working their way out to the end of that wing, picking up again at the far end of the West Wall (left-hand side) and working their way back to the center/apex, joinging the beginning and ending of the conflict at the center.

Volunteers will also man a locator station, which will help visitors find their loved ones names on the wall.

HOURS OF OPERATION:

The Vietnam Traveling Wall will be on display 24 hours a day through noon on Monday, July 15 when closing ceremonies will be held.

The wall will be guarded by volunteers the entire time it is in Grant County. Some of the volunteers include local Vietnam veterans.

PARKING:

Parking is available at the Veterans Cemetery and on adjoining property. Golf carts are available to shuttle visitors from the parking area to the wall. The exhibit is handicapped accesible.

Police need help with suspect ID

By Jamie Baker-Nantz

Police need the public’s help in identifying a suspect who broke into a Williamstown factory.

According to Williamstown Police Chief Al Rich, a male subject entered Gusher Pump on Industrial Road around 8:30 p.m. on June 30 by breaking out a window.

Once inside the business, the suspect vandalized several vending machines in the building.

Surveillance video shows the man rummaging through the office area.

Police believe the suspect was driving a red car, possibly a Chevrolet Cavalier.

Employees reported a red car in the area in the days that followed the break in.

“At this point we don’t know if it was the same vehicle or not,” said Rich.

Williamstown Officer Matt Boshears is conducting the investigation.

Anyone with information is asked to call the Williamstown Police Department at 859-824-3353.

Council votes down payroll tax increase

A standing-room only crowd of more than 40 people watched July 1 as the Dry Ridge City Council shot down a payroll increase.

The question remains, however, if another increase will be brought back to the table.

“I think it’s dead,” said Mayor Clay Crupper. “They can’t seem to agree.”

Crupper originally had recommended that the council raise the payroll tax from .5 percent to 1 percent in order to generate about $320,000 in much-needed additional revenue.

In the recently passed 2013-14 city budget, Dry Ridge is estimated to only have $32,912 in its General Fund at the end of the fiscal year.

However, a motion was later made to increase the payroll tax to 1.5 percent.

“I never did want a 1.5 percent payroll tax like they started out with,” Crupper said. “I just wanted a half percent (increase) to do us a good job and give us a little money in reserves to replace an ambulance later on or the water tower’s going to have to be painted. We’re going to have to have some money for stuff. I was just trying to build up a little reserve for that.”

MESSERLY PROVES EARNING GED TO BE HARD WORK

By Bryan Marshall
Staff Writer

One long journey recently came to an end for Alexis Messerly while another exciting chapter began.

After two years of hitting the books, the 18-year-old Crittenden resident earned her GED at the Grant County Adult Education Center.

"I was excited because I knew it would help me with the rest of my life," Alexis said. "I really didn't know much. I didn't know my multiplication facts and stuff like that before I started at the GED Center. I didn't do much math. That place has helped me so much. They're great there. They are just really good people."

Alexis began home schooling in the third grade.

When her mom died, she moved to Crittenden with her dad and stepmom, her brother and twin sisters.

A month later, Alexis decided to start working to earn her GED, which she received May 2013

"They've been really, really supportive," she said of her family. "They've been awesome."

Alexis attended classes every weekday, including during the summers.

Math was the most difficult subject for her.

If she had trouble, Alexis said she would ask for more homework until she understood the subject.

She also received help from tutors along the way.

"I knew if I stopped, I would lose it," Alexis said. "If I lost what I learned, I would have to start over."

As the day to take the GED test inched closer, Alexis knew she had to clear her mind.

"I know if I would have thought about it the days before it I would have gotten all nervous," she said. "So, the day before and the day of the test, I was outside riding four-wheelers and dirt bikes trying to get my mind off of it. I went in and scored really good."

Not only did her hard work earn her a GED, but Alexis was named the Outstanding Student of the Year for Grant County Adult Education at Gateway's Nite of Excellence in May.

"It was pretty cool," she said. "There was all kinds of students at the center and they picked me to get that award. I thought that was pretty nice. I didn't come into the center expecting to get an award like that. That's for sure."

Amelia Cloud, Grant County Adult Education director, described Alexis as a dedicated and hard-working student.

"She is an inspiration to other students at the learning center," Cloud said. "Over the two years that she has been coming to GCAE, she has developed confidence and has become more outgoing. This is evident since she now helps other students with their work. In addition, she is often called upon by the instructors to provide notes for students who missed a class, because she is such a good note taker. Her persistence, determination and attitude are commendable. She was unanimously chosen by the GCAE staff and faculty for this award."

Alexis Messerly, middle, was named Outstanding Student of the Year for Grant County Adult Education.

Alexis said her late mother would be proud of her accomplishments.

Now, she is looking at colleges, including NKU-Grant County, Gateway College and Brown-Mackie.

Alexis wants to study marketing in hopes of eventually working for NASCAR.

"I want to keep the momentum going," she said.

For those on the fence about getting their GED, Alexis said the hard work is worth it in the end.

The Grant County Adult Education began giving free GED testing on May 15 and will go through July 31.

Visit www.grantged.com for orientation and testing times.

The hours for the center are 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

The GED testing changes Jan. 2014.

"It may be hard at the beginning, but it will all pay off in the end," Alexis said. "Just keep working hard. Do the homework. If you don't, you're just hurting yourself. If you need help, just ask the teacher or get a tutor."

For more information, call Amelia Cloud at 859-823-1341.

After hearing complaints from local employees during its June 17 meeting, the council voted 4-2 to withdraw the ordinance that would have tripled the amount anyone who works within the city limits would have to pay.

Council members Scott Bates and Sara Cummins voted against withdrawing the ordinance.

A second motion to raise the payroll tax from .5 percent to 1 percent also failed 4-2 with Jim Hendy and Fred Money voting yes and Bates, Cummins, Kenny Edmondson and Carisa Hughett voting no.

"A half percent would have put us in decent shape, I think," Crupper said. "I was disappointed it didn't get passed. I thought they would pass it, but they didn't. So, we'll just go from there and do the best we can."

"I think the next step is for the next budget, unless more money comes in than what we think, we'll just have to do a lot of cutting," he said. "We'll have to lay off some in the firehouse or something."

Although both a .5 percent and 1 percent increase were voted down, there still may be a chance another payroll increase is brought to the table by the council.

"What if we want to raise beyond a .5 percent?" Edmondson asked after both ordinances failed. "What if we didn't want the whole percent? What if we want .75 percent?"

> "No one wants new taxes. No one wants increased taxes. No one wants taxes at all. It's a necessary evil."
>
> - Earl Abshire
> Dry Ridge resident

Under that rate increase, the payroll tax would go to 1.25 percent.

Before an official motion could be made, Hughett expressed her concern for voting before looking at all the city's financial numbers closer, a sentiment Edmondson agreed with.

"I think our concern is that we still have not discussed salaries here, overtime here, police department here," he said.

The meeting also included discussion about getting a committee of three council members to meet with department heads and examine their budgets.

Crupper said the next step is up to the council.

"If they want to bring (a .75-percent increase) up, I've kind of left it up to them," he said.

Armed with signs and chants, members of UAW Local 3064 at Dana Corp. gathered at Piddle Park 90 minutes before the meeting and marched down the street to the city building.

The group shouted, "What do we want? No more taxes! When do we want it? Now!" and "No justice, no peace!" as several passing cars honked and waved.

Crupper opened up the floor to any attendee who wanted to speak after the ordinances failed.

Earl Abshire, who spent three terms on a city council and was a volunteer fireman in Boone County, said he would not be popular, but he believes if you cut services, the city will not be able to grow.

"No one wants new taxes," Abshire said. "No one wants increased taxes. No one wants taxes at all. It's a necessary evil."

Ken Little, city sewer superintendent, highlighted how little Dry Ridge has been operating with currently.

"We are operating in the city with a one-man water department, a one-man sewer department, a one-man maintenance department," he said. "We want better parks. This mayor has done a great job in seven years of operating with the minimum amount. We haven't raised it."

"I'm not saying I want to pay the tax no more than the next guy because I'd have to pay it too," Little said. "But, if you care anything about this city and the future of it, we've got to put some money back sometime."

Tim Reynolds, plant manager of Dana Corp. in Dry Ridge, explained how a 1.5 percent payroll tax would have impacted his employees.

"I have roughly 324 people in the plant in Dry Ridge," Reynolds said. "We pay about $68,000 in payroll taxes currently at the half-percent mark. Had that gone into effect, our plant, which I think is perhaps the biggest employer outside of the school system, would have been paying about $205,000."

As the city continues to look for more revenue or to cut expenses, Reynolds said he would be happy to sit down with city representatives to help in anyway.

Beverly Fryman, vice president of UAW Local 3064 at Dana, stressed that the council look at every aspect before coming to any future decision of tax increases.

"We want the city to grow," she said. "We want the community to grow. I feel like we all need to work together on this. I want you all to make the right choice and right decision. What you did tonight, I appreciate. We don't want Dana to go anywhere. We don't want Gusher Pumps to go anywhere. None of the businesses here in the city do we want to leave."

OUR OPINION

DR council needs a plan

Dry Ridge is between a rock and a hard place, at least as far as its budget is concerned.

The city has been predicting dire consequences for a couple of years that included laying off employees to pulling the city's fire and ambulances back to only make calls within the city limits.

After the July 1 council meeting, Dry Ridge Mayor Clay Crupper predicted more budget woes.

Crupper said if the city doesn't raise more revenue or fails to cut expenses, it will be broke by this time next year.

With a paid staff that provides fire protection and ambulance services to residents in the city and also in areas outside the city limits, the Dry Ridge Fire Department is the city's biggest expense.

Crupper said if the city council doesn't come up with a different plan that brings in more revenue, then the council will be forced to "do a lot of cutting." See story on page 1 of this issue.

That means, according to Crupper, "We'll have to lay off some in the firehouse or something."

The council was divided on whether to raise the tax by .5 percent or by 1 percent. Both of those options were rejected and a .75 percent increase was briefly mentioned.

Crupper said the issue is dead as far as he's concerned and it's now up to the council to find a solution to the city's budget woes.

Discussion was held about forming a committee of three council members to meet with the city's department heads in order to gather information about their budgets and needs so they can bring options back to the full council.

That sounds like a plan.

The bottom line is that no one wants to pay more taxes any more than we want to pay more for gas or groceries, but that's the times we are living in.

Despite signs that the economy is improving, there are people struggling to keep their businesses and households afloat and an additional tax would be a burden to them.

The reason there are elections for council and mayor are so that people sitting in those seats will work cooperatively to find solutions to problems, provide services such as police, fire, ambulance and streets and do it as cost effective as possible.

For the city council to do nothing about their budget issues and hope the problem solves itself, is just wrong.

People need to be heard

It is good when the public gets involved and such was the case last week when 40 people attended the Dry Ridge City Council meeting to express their views on a proposed increase in the city's occupational tax.

Most of those in attendance marched from Piddle Park to the city building. Many carried signs in protest of the proposed tax and American flags.

Too often people stay silent and then gripe when they don't like the decisions that elected officials make.

The way we see it is that good government means people taking time to get involved and let their voice be heard.

"Change" always seems to be quite the hot topic in our society from politics to restaurant management and even education.

In Kentucky's educational system, teachers are taking this need for change to heart; it is not simply being said to describe a new direction, but a completely different paradigm in teaching and learning within our great state.

Kentucky is on the forefront implementing a state-wide Professional Growth and Effectiveness System (PGES). This system is quite unique as it addresses the core of education, the effectiveness of educational professionals otherwise known as TEACHERS.

Through this system of evaluation, teacher professionals are observed and measured with an emphasis on planning, preparation, environment, instruction, professional responsibility, and student growth.

Each of these areas are directly tied to Charlotte Danielson's research based framework, she is the Vince Lombardy of teacher evaluation creating the play-book for educational effectiveness.

This movement is quite the undertaking and Kentucky teachers have found the support of The Hope Street Group, a non-profit organization seeking to aide teachers to voice their unique visions to policy makers ensuring those working the closest with your students create and implement effective best practices of teaching.

This revolutionary goal of transforming teaching in Kentucky by teachers along with the support of the Hope Street Group focuses on cultivating teacher effectiveness along with shared leadership.

Effectiveness is a difficult word to define but is easy to observe and measure. As a history teacher, I constantly have my students measure the effectiveness of historic decisions, from the cotton gin to the Atomic Bomb.

I am sure you have done this as a parent—for example: you have probably asked your child, "Did you use your time effectively by watching TV as we now have to finish your science fair project at midnight?" Teacher professionals are constantly learning and growing to become the most effective instructors we can be in our classrooms, just as parents are doing the same to become the most effective leaders in their homes.

As teachers, we must not wonder if we are effective, we need proof as in statistics, observations, discussions, etc.

The Danielson framework is at the heart of Kentucky's Professional Growth and Effectiveness System and provides the tool for such research into our classroom and ourselves. Research supports that teachers are more effective when they work in a professional culture where their opinions and input are valued.

This is where the Hope Street Group, along with their 21 teacher ambassadors in the state, are creating an arena where school professionals are supported by policy makers to exchange ideas, strategies, and problem solve collaboratively.

You may ask yourself, "Why is this not already taking place?" Students and teachers have essentially been practicing the same strategies since the 1950s. The classroom and schools for that fact were modeled around factories, rows and rows of desks, just like a factory line and teachers seen as foremen.

The needs of our students and global society no longer require such an education. Our students must be held to 21st century standards, not 1950s practices.

Kentucky teachers are growing professionally through better evaluations which inform future practices instead of highlighting past accomplishments and shortfalls to ensure the effectiveness of our students as worthy citizens.

A WORD FROM OUR READERS…

Daughter remembers father's kindness

As many of you know, my father died from a self-inflicted gun shot wound on June 25, 2013 in Williamstown.

What you don't know, is that he suffered from a severe case of Huntington's Disease. Huntington's Disease is a progressive neurodegenerative disease.

The people who suffer from this disease, suffer from extreme cases of paranoia, depression, erratic and impulsive behavior and in most cases, become suicidal.

My father's depression began when he was forced to retire from the Davenport Police Department (in Florida), due to his diagnosis is 2006.

In the last six months to a year of his life, his behavior was out of character and extreme to those who were unaware of his condition, and heart breaking to those of us who were aware.

Several people and establishments were affected by this and for that, I offer my sincerest apologies. I know that everyone was supportive of him and his business, and for that, I thank you.

My dad was a good man and helped a lot of people. He was known for his detail business in Williamstown, Mike's Detail Shop, and for his daily walks through Williamstown with the dogs, Fella, Ginger and Abby.

After all of the stories I've heard surrounding my father's death, I have found that as his daughter, it's my duty to offer an explanation so that others may have a better understanding. I assure you that his words and actions, for the most part, were a direct result of the disease he was battling.

If you have a friend or family member who has been diagnosed with this disease, I urge you to educate yourself and your family. Daddy went down hill so fast that we weren't able to act quickly enough. Please don't make that same mistake.

Mayor says cooperation equals success

Recently the City of Williamstown joined forces with Grant County Parks and Recreation and the Williamstown Fire Department to host a Party in the Park. Over 500 residents enjoyed an inflatable slide and firehouse compliments of the fire department. The city provided healthy snacks, face painting, balloon making and corn hole. The final attraction was the movie Madagascar 3, shown on our Parks and Recreation's inflatable screen.

Tabatha Clemons, director of Parks and Recreation provided the screen, the speaker, projector and event staff to set up and take down the screen. I want to personally thank Katelyn Disney, KJ Little and Kyle Wallace for their help. They set the system up around 6 p.m. and stayed until the movie was over to make sure all went well. The four of them worked until midnight to load up the equipment and take it back to Crittenden.

Les Whalen, Williamstown Fire Chief, provided the city with two inflatables and the volunteers to watch the children as they played. The sense of community service is very evident among the fire fighters.

Lastly, I would like to thank Dale Caskey and all other city workers that got the ball field ready, provided the electric system, set up tents, served and did cleanup. It gives me a good feeling to know that different groups within the county can come together for the good of the county.

DOWN AND DIRTY

Foliar diseases like it cool, wet

The cool, wet weather for summer 2013 is certainly being enjoyed by all; including those that are part of the fungi family. Gardeners wondered about the toadstools popping up in their lawns; others were confounded by the stinky, phallic-looking things poking through their mulch, a mushroom commonly called the stinkhorn; and the slimy orange globs on cedar trees got many thinking aliens had landed in their landscape.

Weather can bring on all kinds of natural occurring oddities. Too wet, too dry, too hot or too cold, there is a pest problem that is favored by every weather pattern imaginable and this year the cool, wet spring favored fungal diseases like rust and anthracnose.

It is already clear that rust diseases like cedar-apple rust, cedar-hawthorn rust and cedar-quince rust are widespread this season. The disease is evidenced in the early spring by bright orange spores (the slimy orange globs) on eastern red cedars or other Juniperus species. Once development is complete on the cedar the teliospores are released and carried through the air to the next host plant. These other hosts include apple, hawthorn, crabapple or serviceberry. We have some young apple trees that look like they have been splattered in orange paint.

These rust diseases must have two specific hosts in order to complete their life cycles. For example, cedar-hawthorn rust needs a Juniperus species, like the eastern red cedar to develop during the parasitic stage of life; then needs as a second host plant, the hawthorn, to complete the fruiting stage; then it travels back to re-infect the cedars once again. Yellow spots appear on the foliage in the spring, turning orange as the season progresses and fruit is infected.

Anthracnose will likely be more prevalent this year, too. Trees that are susceptible include dogwood, sycamore, maple and ash. The fungus that causes anthracnose is slightly different for each species of tree, so the fungus that infects sycamores will not infect maples, and so on. Symptoms vary from species to species so for a definite diagnosis samples should be sent to your county extension service.

Jeneen
WICHE
Weekend Gardener

Infection, fungus

Anthracnose on sycamores results in leaf and twig die back early in the season; the leaves that fall are often replaced by new ones. The infection is still there, however, and may continue to develop into cankers on larger branches and limbs. The fungus will remain viable in these cankers and on the fallen debris and re-infect the tree the following year, so this is why it is important to prune away diseased twigs and limbs and rake up fallen debris. It seems that sycamores suffer no matter the weather or our efforts to thwart the disease.

Ash trees react a little differently to the fungus that causes anthracnose. As the new leaves grow, brown splotches will appear, at first around the edges, and the entire leaflet will fall from the tree. Leaves that are mature will have brown circular scars but you will not see any twig or branch cankers…they are there we just don't see them.

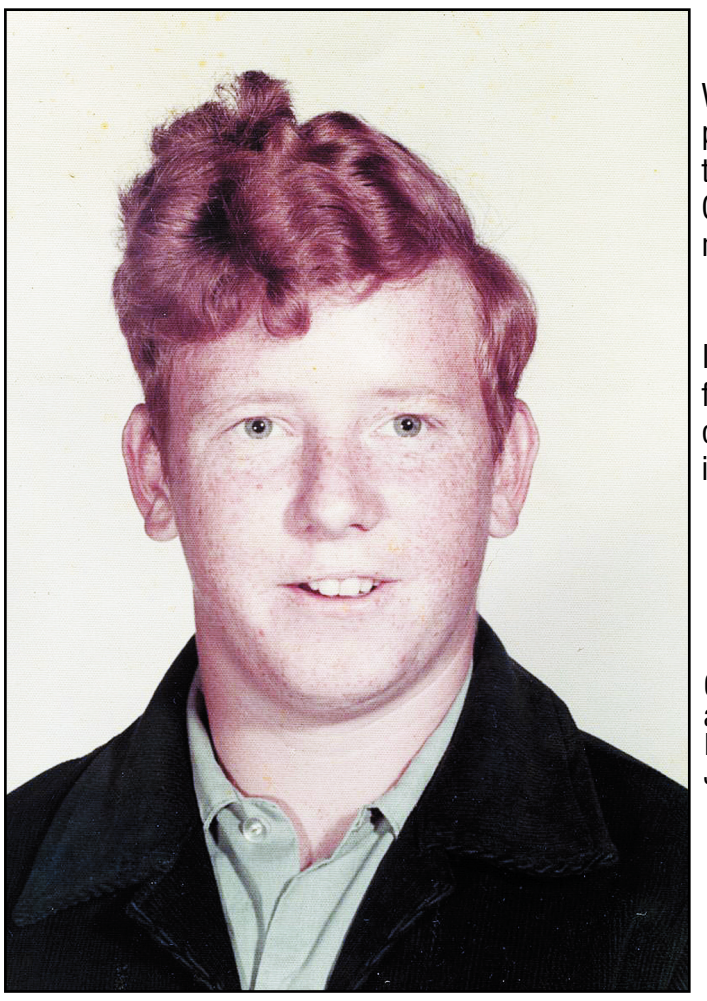

Similarly, maples will show leaf spots but they will be irregular in shape and you will see more tip dieback where the new shoots were infected. Some maples show most of the lesions near the leaf veins. Dogwood anthracnose causes leaf spots, blighted foliage and twigs and can cause lower branches to die back completely

It is difficult to distinguish which disease pathogen is causing leaf spots; and, at this point it is essentially too late to effectively use a fungicide. Dr. John Hartman, plant pathologist at the University of Kentucky, recommends that we utilize good housekeeping by raking up leaves and infected twigs that have fallen from infected trees. Removing the pathogen this year will reduce the incidence next year.

So, clean up what falls to the ground and prune out what dies back on the tree in order to prevent re-infection. Keep your trees healthy by irrigating them during times of drought and if you fertilize do so only in the late fall in order to promote healthy root development. Usually anthracnose won't kill a healthy shade tree, although it does take away from the tree appearance.

FAITH & VALUES

VERSE OF THE WEEK:

Praising God, and having favour with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved.

Acts 2:47 (KJV)

RELIGIOUS VIEWS

Fellowship in the church

Recently we took a group of guys from our church to the Promise Keepers convention in Nashville, TN. The event was filled with great speakers and worship, but the highlight of the weekend for me wasn't anything that any speaker said or any song that anyone sang. In fact, the highlight didn't even happen at the Promise Keepers convention itself. The highlight was the drive in the church van there and back with a bunch of likeminded Christian men who could laugh and cut up and just have a great time together. We laughed so hard our sides literally hurt! It was such a blessing to be able to have that kind of bond with a group of men and such a blessing to have that outlet.

So many times we men are missing that kind of fellowship. We crave it. What is better than a bunch of guys looking under a hood of a car together? The real joy is not the work on the engine but the fun you have hanging out with the guys around you. Men crave that bond to hang out and just be guys. Women crave this as well (with other women…though there are some who like to hang out with guys and vice versa). In fact, we all crave this type of fellowship.

Yet where is this in the church? So many times in the church our men are lone wolves who, when they do come to church, (it is sad the number of men who stay at home while their wives and children come to church) they stay by themselves and don't get involved. Often it is because they are weary to get involved because of the image the church has with men (not necessarily good!). Yet, deep inside they crave that bond with other like-minded believers. Chuck Swindoll told about an old Marine Corps buddy of his, who became a Christian after he left the Corps. His friend told him how he had come to Christ and how great it was but then with a look of sadness, he put his hand on Swindoll's shoulder a lamented: "Chuck, the only thing I miss is that old fellowship all the guys in our outfit used to have down at the Slop Shoot (Greek for tavern on base). Man, we'd sit around, laugh, tell stories, drink a few beers, and really let our hair down. It was great. I just haven't found anything to take the place of that great time we use to enjoy. I ain't got nobody to admit my faults to. . . to have 'em put their arm around me and tell me I'm still okay."

Barry
ROBINSON

Pastor's Corner

I think we all need to have a place like that, but especially men. Yet, so many places where we find this type of bonding aren't based on a mutual bond of Jesus Christ and they act as a cheap counterfeit to the fellowship the church ought to be providing. The local church is more than a place where we come to sing and study. It is a place where we enter into relationships with other believers where we can be ourselves, admit our mistakes and find grace, love and acceptance. It is a place where the bond is greater than any other because it is the bond of Jesus Christ. But here is the key: We have to get involved. And when the church has this kind of fellowship that has the grace, the love, and the joy…that kind of fellowship is contagious!

Coming back from the trip to Nashville, we stopped off at a gas station in a small town and as we left the van a woman was coming out of the gas station. She looked at us and mentioned to one of our men who was bringing up the rear: "That is one group of happy men." I wonder how many people can say that about our churches today.

WHS Archery strikes bullseye in first year

Alexander places 11th in world championship

The Williamstown High School archery team hit a bullseye in its first year.

What began as a group of students shooting arrows in the gym ended June 29 at the Edward Jones Dome in St. Louis at the National Archery in the Schools Program (NASP) World Championship.

The team had previously competed in the state and national competitions in Louisville to qualify for the biggest tournament of the year.

The NASP World Championship featured 2,907 archers from 22 states and two provinces in Canada, representing 175 schools.

For Williamstown High School, 21 archers competed and the team finished 25th out of 48 in the high school division with a score of 3,203.

Freshman Courtney Alexander shot her personal best — a 287 out of 300 — to finish 11th in the high school female division and sixth in her grade.

She placed 18th overall in the competition.

"It was really nerve-racking," Alexander said. "I was really excited after I found out. I was just trying to do the best I could. I was trying hard. My goal was, if I didn't do as good as I wanted to, at just wanted to do better than the last tournament."

Alexander said her previous highest score was a 282 at the last practice before the World Championship.

She competed against 375 other female archers in the high school division.

"I'm OK with not being the best," Alexander said. "I just want to make myself better. If I do better, that's great. Now, let's see how much better I can do next time."

Before joining the team, Alexander had only played around with her brother's bow and arrow in the backyard.

Having described herself as "not a girly-girl," Alexander jumped at the chance to join the team because it sounded like fun and she "got to shoot stuff."

"It was a great experience," she said. "I don't think I've ever had so much fun with a school trip until archery. I really got to know the coaches and they helped a lot."

This was the NASP's fifth consecutive world championship event.

Every student, regardless of their grade-level or experience, shot five practice and 15 scored arrows at an 80 centimeter target from both 10 and 15 meters.

A perfect score is 300 (30 bulls-eyes).

Team scores are established by summing the top 12 scores among the team's archers. Both genders must be represented in the team score.

From hosting their own tournament to watching as their coach Mike Walters shaved his head and beard to celebrate making it to the World Championship, the season was filled with highlights.

"This is one big family and I love this team," said sophomore Jacob Fryman. "Each shooter were the best in my eyes."

Seventh grader Rachel Jones said she felt she was part of "the luckiest team in the world" to enjoy so much success in the first year.

"I wanted to join because of 'The Hunger Games,' and to get a higher score than my friends," she said.

For junior Dylan Evans, it was about trying something new that took focus and got his mind off everything else.

"Being a part of the team hasn't just improved my aim," he said. "It's helped me meet new friends and bond with them. I can't wait for next year. We've made it to the Worlds this time and we can do it again."

The complete scores for the Williamstown team include:

- Courtney Alexander- 287
- Brennon Osborne- 273
- Jacob Fryman- 271
- Brent McClanahan- 269
- Eden Jackson- 269

Jail SAP program meets state requirements

The Substance Abuse Program within the Grant County Detention Center was recently evaluated by the Office of Inspector General.

"We would like to take this opportunity to express our appreciation for the courtesy extended to the staff of this office during our visit. The purpose of the visit was to determine compliance with state licensure regulations. Upon reviewing the results of the survey, it was determined that your facility is meeting state licensure requirements with no deficiencies for an Alcohol & Other Drug Entity," said the regional program manager.

The SAP program is an intense program, which helps inmates learn to overcome addiction and substance abuse issues.

WHS educator chosen as Ky. Teacher Fellow

By Bryan Marshall
Staff Writer

A Williamstown High School social studies teacher will be among a small group of educators selected to help voice opinions from across the state on reform efforts.

Paradise Forbes is one of 21 educators chosen from a large pool of highly competitive candidates as part of Hope Street Group's inaugural cohort of Kentucky Teacher Fellows.

Hope Street Group is a national nonprofit organization known for its teacher engagement work.

"I am incredibly honored and enthused to have the opportunity to empower teachers and students within our great state," Forbes said. "Honestly, that is what led me to apply for the Hope Street Kentucky Teacher Fellowship in the first , as their mission of promoting collaborative problem solving truly is at the core of my educational philosophy, as well as that of Williamstown Schools. As a government and economics teacher, I see teacher engagement within the classroom and policy construction essential to moving our students into competitive roles in our ever changing global economy."

Along with her teaching duties, Forbes also serves as a Site Based Decision-Making (SBDM) teacher representative for WHS.

She has been a presenter at the Florida Education Technology Conference, Kentucky Society for Technology in Education, Ohio Valley Educational Cooperative Intervention and Innovation and Fayette County's Innovation for Learning conferences, along with participation in the McConnell Center/ Liberty Fund Conference and 2012-13 Literacy Leaders Academy.

Hailing from 20 districts across the state, the fellows will serve as leaders over the next 12 months.

The group will engage school communities, inform state policy discussions and participate in professional development and training opportunities.

"I truly am impressed by Hope Street's support of educational professionals in the creation and implementation of teacher evaluation systems," Forbes said. "Hope Street recognizes that our teacher evaluation system must involve teacher input to ensure the changing needs of our students are being meet effectively and efficiently."

Williamstown Independent Superintendent Sally Skinner said she was excited and proud that Forbes was chosen for "prestigious and important work."

"Ms. Forbes has proven herself to be innovative and creative. She is a critical thinker and is solution oriented. She is a teacher leader and her selection as a Kentucky Teacher Fellow validates everything those of us who have had the privilege of working with her, have known for a long time," said Skinner.
